She is currently employed by the Emergency Management and Planning Office at the Ministry of Transportation where she is participating in a comprehensive review of the emergency management program. Prior to this, she worked for six years at the Office of the Fire Marshal and Emergency Management (formerly Emergency Management Ontario) as the Hazard Identification and Risk Assessment Officer. During this time she developed the Ontario Provincial HIRA methodology which was selected as the basis for an input paper for the UNISDR's Global Assessment Report 2015. She is currently a PhD candidate at Wilfrid Laurier where she is researching the role of classification in functional emergency planning for vulnerable groups.
